S. J. EAKLE FORMER MOKENA TEACHER, DIES

It was with profound regret and sorrow that the many Mokena friends of S. J. Eakle, former principal of the Mokena public school, learned of his death on Feb. 23rd in his home in Polo, Ill.

During his residence in Mokena Mr. Eakle built two dwellings in Mokena on Neithammer street, one now owned by Barney Hostert, the other by Mrs. John Horras. The latter place is now occupied by Albert Cappel.

While a resident of Mokena Mr. Eakle organized a boy's band and was vitally interested in local civic affairs. He was a member of the Mokena Methodist church.

He taught school thruout various parts of the state. He first came here from Redman, Illinois.

Silas Jackson Eakle was born in Forreston, Illinois, on August 8, 1859, the youngest son of Absalom and Amelia Eakle. His father was a millwright and carpenter.

Mr. Eakle graduated from Forreston high school and then taught school for a number of years. He entered the University of Illinois and there majored in the study of chemistry. He graduated from the institution with a Bachelor of Science degree in 1894.

In 1900 he married Miss Emma Nazarene of Polo, who also had been a teacher. They lived in various places where Mr. Eakle served as principal of the high schools. In the year 1937 they returned to Polo where Mr. Eakle assisted by a brother who passed away in August of last year, built for himself and wife a bungalow in Polo.

Two years ago he was stricken with a partial paralysis from which, however, he slowly recovered. He was about again, attended church regularly, as was his custom, met his friends and attended to business and light work around his home. During the past nine months, he had been in failing health.

Mr. Eakle died at his home February 23rd after a serious illness of one week. He had reached the age of 80 years and six months.

Surviving are his widow, Emma Eakle, a sister, Miss Emma Eakle of Forreston, a number of nieces and nephews.

Funeral services were held Sunday, February 26th at 1:30 from the late home and at 2:30 in the Methodist church in Polo with Rev. T. A. Loeppert, pastor, officiating. He was assisted by Rev. T. S. Bolton of the Forreston Lutheran church. Interment was made in the White Oak cemetery west of Forreston.

Among the out of town relatives who attended funeral services were Miss Emma Eakle, Miss Ella Stine, Mr. and Mrs. John Deuth, Mrs. Ralph Akins, Martin H. Eakle of Forreston, Herbert Eakle, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Peterson of Colona, Charles Eigenborde, Mrs. Harlan McNett of Mount Morris, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Eakle of Shannon and Mrs. Harry Gardner of Dixon.

Mr. Eakle was a man of genial and kindhearted disposition and will be greatly missed by not only his immediate family, but by all those who knew him as a neighbor and as a friend.

Mrs. Eakle expects to continue living in her home in Polo.

Lightning Strikes Radio Tower

Last Saturday a heavy thunderstorm swept this section and lightning struck the 586 foot tower of radio station WLS-WENR two and a half miles northeast of Mokena, knocking the station off the air for about 15 minutes until temporary repairs could be made. The bolt traveled down the tower to blow out antenna tuning coils.

An extremely black cloud virtually blacked out the entire country side and lights had to be kept burning during the duration of the freak storm.

Dogs Kill Chickens and Ducks

Recently Wm. Hafka of New Lenox reported to the F men of his township that he was missing chickens and ducks and thought thieves were operating. The F men discovered that dogs from a nearby farm were the marauders. The farmer was told to take care of the dogs, but disclaimed ownership of them. The F men said if the dogs are on the rampage again they will be disposed of.

This takes in the bank, taverns, garages, etc. The Methodist and St. Peter's Evangelical churches will hold union services in the St. Peter's church.

Many Democratic Candidates Quit Race

On the plea of preserving harmony in the Democratic party in Will County quite a number of candidates for county offices have withdrawn from the race. Following candidates have filed withdrawals:

For State's Attorney, Edwin L. Wilson, J. Harold Downey and Wm. E. Austin, leaving F. Donald Delaney, Francis A. Dunn and Francis J. Loughran in the race.

For Recorder of Deeds, Robert J. Balma, Michael M. Kowalski and Herbert O. Martin, leaving only Thomas V. Brennan in the race.

For Coroner, Gregory M. Carey of Joliet, Thomas J. Carey of New Lenox and Thomas Moore of Mokena have withdrawn, leaving the field on the Democratic ticket clear for Londo B. Branno the present incumbent.

In Frankfort township the precinct committeeman job is sought after. In Mokena the second precinct of the township Robert M. Maue and Albert H. Hentsch are in the race. In Frankfort precinct Ora R. Andrews is the only candidate on the Democratic ticket for this office. In New Lenox township John Embling is a candidate for the precinct committeeman job in precinct one and James Burns in precinct two.

On the Republican ticket no withdrawals were filed with the exception of a few precinct committeemen candidates thruout the county.

From present indications the heat of the primary campaign will be on the Republican ticket.

Tel. Co., Authorized To File Changes In Service Rates

The Commerce Commission has issued the following order authorizing the Bell Telephone Co., to place in effect schedules of rates for the Mokena, New Lenox, Orland, Palos Park and Tinley Park exchanges on less than 30 days notice:

By the Commission:

The petition filed herein requests authority to place in effect schedules of rates for the Mokena, New Lenox, Orland, Palos Park and Tinley Park exchanges of petitioner attached to the petition as exhibit "A" on less than 30 days notice.

The matter was heard by the Commission on Nov. 29, 1939 and Dec. 8, 1939, in the office of the Commission at Chicago, Illinois, at which time the parties were represented by counsel and evidence was adduced upon the petition.

These exchanges of petitioner are now operated by means of magneto system switchboards. Some of the territory is also served by rural telephone service only at the present time. It has been proposed that the magneto type switchboard service be supplanted in this territory by common battery service, and, at the same time, certain of the subscribers now securing only rural service be furnished urban or classified service through a new exchange, to be known as the Palos Park Exchange.

The evidence indicated the installation of the common battery system in the communities involved in lieu of the present magneto systems, would cost petitioner about $125,000.00 in new money, and after plant displaced by the new equipment had been removed from the books, would result in a net addition to the plant investment in this territory of about $43,000.00.

The evidence further showed that the operating revenues in this territory failed to meet the operating expenses by a considerable sum of money. While the schedules proposed to be put in effect in these communities would increase the revenues to the company by about $1000 a year, there still would be an operating deficit in these exchanges according to the Telephone Company.

In this situation, the desires of the telephone subscribers and citizens of the communities affected

New Super-Distance Air 'Dreadnaught' Will Fly Non-Stop, New York-to-Rome

WASHINGTON.—On March 15, if the civil aeronautics authority permits, a new air service will be inaugurated between New York and Rome under sponsorship of American Export airlines.

Competing with Pan-American clippers which went into service last spring, the new airline will be but the precursor to an even faster service which American Export lines will start early in 1941.

Patterned After Navy Plane.

For the time being it is planned to carry only mail and express in a two-motor Consolidated flying boat which will run from New York to the Azores, to Lisbon and thence to Rome. But the new airships now being built by Vought-Sikorsky are expected to usher in a new era of trans-oceanic aviation, flying non-stop from New York to Rome.

These giant ships are called "dreadnaughts," for they are nothing less than a commercial version of the American navy's newest long-range flying dreadnaught. The ships will have no trouble carrying a full pay load 4,600 miles non-stop, flying at a maximum rate of 230 miles an hour, and at a cruising speed of 175 miles.

Slightly smaller than the Pan-American clippers, which carry 21 passengers, the Vought-Sikorsky ships will accommodate 16 paying guests plus a crew of 11 and a substantial load of mail and express. They will provide every modern improvement with palatial sleeping accommodations, an attractive lounge and separate dressing rooms for men and women.

American Export lines believe the non-stop schedule embodies many advantages, providing greater reliability of service and eliminating the hazards of landing in unprotected harbors.

New York to Rome Overnight. Speed will be an important factor.

Passengers will be able to cross the Atlantic in only a little more time than it now requires to go by train from New York to Chicago. Leaving New York in the morning, the ships will be in Italy the next afternoon. Fast scheduled rail and air connections available at Rome will put the traveler and mail into Paris, London, Berlin, Budapest and other important European cities the same evening or the following morning—36 to 40 hours out of New York.

Co-operating with Igor Sikorsky in designing the ship is Michael E. Gluhareff, chief of design for United Aircraft corporation. The dreadnaught, already thoroughly tested by the United States navy, has a wing span of 124 feet, an overall hull length of 79 feet, 3 inches, and a maximum hull beam of 10 feet. Three separate tanks concealed in the wings will carry 3,900 gallons of fuel, making the non-stop flight across the Atlantic entirely feasible. The ship will be powered with four engines producing 1,200 horsepower each.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

CARTER FIELD

Recent developments, according to Carter Field, leave no doubt that Roosevelt can have the nomination if he wants it . . . New Deal's left wing is split over receivership for Associated Gas . . . John L. Lewis' latest blow at Roosevelt shrewdly aimed.

WASHINGTON.—Developments in Massachusetts and Ohio, following those in Illinois, remove what little doubt there was that Franklin D. Roosevelt can have a renomination by the Democratic national convention at Chicago if he wants it. Up until very recently there was always the possibility that he might be defeated by a group of "allies."

Roosevelt's strength has lain chiefly in the fact that there weren't any "allies." The only candidate who dared to come out with the idea of being in the race whether Roosevelt wanted a third term or not was John Nance Garner. In the beginning there was a real hope that there would be half a dozen, each of whom would gather delegates here and there, until the total of all the "allied" delegates would be in excess of a majority. In short, a "stop Roosevelt" bloc would have been in operation.

That has not materialized for very human reasons. Each of the other candidates, except Garner, has been guided by wishful thinking. This was that Roosevelt would not choose to run, and just might decide to choose "me."

That has been the thinking of Sen. Burton K. Wheeler of Montana who goes about opposing the idea of a third term, but saying he is sure Roosevelt does not want it. He isn't sure of any such thing, never has been. Yet now he says he will not oppose Roosevelt in any primary. He doesn't want to split the "progressive" vote, for the nomination of a conservative Democrat would throw the country into the hands of the Republicans!

McNutt Has Handicap in Farley's Personal Animosity

Paul V. McNutt was the first candidate to pick that particular line. But there was more political sagacity in McNutt's course than there has been in Wheeler's. McNutt had a handicap which Wheeler did not have, and which had to be offset to give him a Chinaman's chance. This was the personal animosity of Jim Farley.

When he first started on this "I am for Roosevelt if he wants it, but if he doesn't then I am after the nomination" strategy, McNutt did not know how bitterly the left wingers in the New Deal were against him. But even if he had known, there was no other course open to him. Obviously Farley plus Roosevelt could beat any candidate at the convention, and, not having Farley, McNutt had to have Roosevelt to be in the running. He seems to have failed, but not through any stupidity unless one goes back to his original alienation of Farley.

Farley himself could have been a potent member of a "Stop Roosevelt" bloc. But the Massachusetts situation made that pretty nearly impossible. Due to a complicated situation inside the Bay state, Farley found it out of the question to buck a pro-Roosevelt delegation. Especially as he could have the delegation on a platter providing Roosevelt didn't want it.

It was a clear case of half a loaf being better than no bread, but it did not play in with the "Stop Roosevelt" movement at all.

But while Mr. Roosevelt can apparently have the nomination if he wants it, there is still little evidence that his approval for any other candidate is worth very much. It still appears that he must take it himself or see it go to somebody for whom he has no enthusiasm.

Associated Gas Receivership

Outside the gas and electric industries, there perhaps is very little interest in who is receiver for the Associated Gas & Electric company, but in the fight which developed inside the New Deal on that question there is enormous political and economic interest.

In the first place, there is one of the most spectacular divisions inside the left wingers which has occurred since the New Deal came into power seven years ago. It is far more important than the one which resulted in Ray Moley's being exiled. Moley was almost alone in that affair, and besides, it was generally accepted that his exit resulted because Cordell Hull demanded it, on issues which had little to do with main New Deal objectives.

But this time we have Jerome N. Frank, chairman of the Securities and Exchange commission, Leon Henderson, another member of the commission, two men who have been regarded as the extreme left end of the left wing of the New Deal, on one side, while Robert H. Jackson, attorney general, and long Roosevelt's personal choice for his own successor, and the famous Cohen and Corcoran team on the other.

Just to make it more difficult to unravel, Henry Morgenthau Jr. seems to have joined up with the Jackson-Cohen-Corcoran combination. But Capitol Hill also is interested. Sen. George W. Norris is on the Jackson side. But Sen. Burton K. Wheeler, and Democratic House Leader Sam Rayburn are on the other.

Wheeler and Rayburn Are Opposed to SEC as Receiver

It happens that Wheeler and Rayburn sponsored the public utility holding company bill when it went through congress after a bitter fight. Rayburn bore the brunt of the fighting in the house, Wheeler in the senate. This was the bill, now law, which contains the famous "death sentence." Both Wheeler and Rayburn have written vigorous letters to the SEC insisting that this agency should not accept any appointment as receiver for Associated Gas.

The SEC voted, four to one, against accepting the job. But despite this, Attorney General Jackson later asked the New York court having the appointment to name SEC as receiver.

Jackson, Cohen, Corcoran and Norris are reported by friends to be furious with Jerome Frank and Leon Henderson. If these two had voted with Edward C. Eichler, 100 per cent New Dealer and former member of the house, SEC would have voted three to two for accepting the task.

The amazing thing about all this to Washington observers is that Corcoran and Cohen had always assumed they had the SEC in their pockets—especially after William O. Douglas, who had proved a bit untrustworthy from their standpoint, had been replaced by Jerome Frank, whom they regarded as a tried and true radical.

Just why Jackson, Cohen, Corcoran and Norris were so anxious to have the SEC take over the receivership of Associated Gas seems very clear to anti-public ownership men.

Lewis' Latest Blow at Roosevelt Shrewdly Aimed

The blow that John L. Lewis struck at President Roosevelt in his speech before the American Youth Congress was much more shrewdly aimed than the more outspoken attack before the United Mine Workers' gathering at Columbus. Not the attack direct by Lewis in his Youth Congress speech, but the sensational labor peace offer, plus his own proposal to step down from any union labor office once peace was effected.

Ever since the Columbus speech the whole New Deal, from the President himself down, has been seeking to undermine Lewis.

Just look at the history of the whole thing for a moment. Lewis has probably been one of the most aggressive labor leaders in the United States for a good many years. But he never bothered enough to placate and cajole, when it came to dealing with some of his seniors in the American Federation of Labor hierarchy. Also, they resented his appeal to the rank and file—we are now thinking of the period a few years back before the formation of the C. I. O.

So when the late Sam Gompers, undisputed czar of the A. F. of L., which virtually meant the union labor movement in America, was gathered to his fathers it was not Lewis who was chosen to succeed him. The elder statesmen of the Federation distrusted as well as disliked him, while recognizing his ability. So they chose William Green, a man who would take counsel with the old-line leaders and could be counted on not to go off half-cocked.

Lewis Became Rebellious

And This Led to the C. I. O.

This naturally led to such a conservative administration of what was then the labor movement that rebellion was seething everywhere. Most rebellious of all was Lewis, not so much because of the conservatism of the new leadership as because he was not as important a part of that directing authority as he knew he ought to be.

Hence the C. I. O. There has been much talk of Communism in the C. I. O. The talk is true. Lewis is not a Communist. Far from it. At heart he is as conservative as Calvin Coolidge ever was, so far as maintaining the profit system and being against anything socialistic is concerned. Except, of course, as to his views on hours and wages.

But the Communists, with their usual sabotaging intentions, saw a chance to raise Cain through the labor troubles which the C. I. O. promised—especially in the jurisdictional disputes, which would harry the capitalists and tend to wreck the capitalist system regardless of how those particular capitalists might be willing to deal with labor. And for the time being Lewis was not going to look a gift horse in the mouth.

All of which tends to show how vulnerable Lewis is to the suggestion that it is his personal ambition which is the cause of most of the trouble.

Hinged Curtains for Window Cupboards

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

WHY not build cupboards at each side of a pair of windows and a comfortable seat between? This takes very little space and adds useful storage room; as well as a cozy place to sit. The cupboards are hidden by hinged curtains that are a part of the general window treatment. The chintz for the valance and seat pad is in tan, yellow and blue-green. The blue-green edges the curtains and valance and is used also for the two cushions. The frilled glass curtains are clear yellow. The closet curtains tacked to a hinged arm may be swung back just as you would open a door.

NOTE: Mrs. Spears has prepared four booklets for our readers containing a total of 128 thrifty homemaking ideas; with step-by-step illustrated directions. Each book contains an assortment of curtains; slip covers; household furnishings; rag rugs; toys; gifts and novelties for bazaars. Slide Rule Makes Black Magic For Latest Cinematic Thriller

An example of Ernest Schoedsack's magic: One of the "little people" is trampled under the huge foot of "Dr. Cyclops."

HOLLYWOOD.—The black magic of a masterful photographic technician named Ernest Schoedsack is being brought to the screen this year in a motion picture expected to set a new record for weirdness.

People reduced to one-fifth their normal size are the main characters in "Dr. Cyclops," an exciting film which takes place in a scientist's jungle camp at the headwaters of the Amazon. It is Schoedsack's major cinema since he excited the world several years ago with "King Kong," the giant ape.

Aided by a newly developed color process which gives special impact to the shadowy but colorful jungle, the movie tells the story of a malvolent scientist and five people who had come to help him but were repaid by being dwarfed to less than one-fifth their original size.

Process Is a Secret.

How Schoedsack accomplishes this feat is a secret he has attempted to keep within a small circle of trusted assistants. For four months, during production of the picture, not a soul was allowed inside the sets unless directly connected with the film.

Thus the "Dr. Cyclops" characters are placed in a strange world where objects and animals once commonplace now assume terrifying proportions. Chickens, cats and dogs have become monsters capable of dealing death. An alligator they encounter assumes the dimensions of a nightmarish giant reptile out of a prehistoric era. The simplest little tasks—when they were normal—now become stupendously difficult. For example, it is almost impossible to lift a plate or open a door.

Uses Slide Rule.

Uncanny therefore, are the scenes where "Dr. Cyclops" hunts his dwarfed victims with a bird net, where he catches one and holds him securely in the grip of one hand, and where one of the "little people" is cornered and faces the enemy with a table knife for defense.

A large slide rule was one of Schoedsack's most valuable assistants in making the picture. Certain sets showed the "little people" in a room of ordinary furniture which loomed far above their heads. A chair, to them, had the dimensions of a tall building, and a door seemed larger than a cliff.

How did Schoedsack do it? Certainly he couldn't really reduce the cast to one-fifth their normal dimensions. Painstakingly, giant sets were created. Every article was enlarged five times its normal size.

Even this was only a part of Schoedsack's wizardry. Giant sets do not explain how "Dr. Cyclops" could hold another human in the palm of his hand or catch two or three people with the swoop of a butterfly net.

Used X-ray in One Scene.

Schoedsack refuses to divulge much of his camera magic. Those are the trade secrets he has worked out laboriously over many years. But some details have leaked out.

For example, a scene was photographed in which an actor actually decayed before the camera.

Justice Department Gears for Biggest Tax Case in History

CHICAGO.—In the racy parlance of the gambling fraternity, one day soon the government will be off on a fast track here to the trial of Moses L. Annenberg and his henchmen in the late fabulous race wire information empire.

Especially stream-lined court procedure will speed the Annenberg trial, biggest income tax evasion case ever tried by the department of justice, to the barrier while the horse parlor habits of the nation watch the event. Federal Judge James H. Wilkerson will preside. Already the fast pace of justice in this federal action, as compared to historical trials of similar nature in the past, has distinguished counsel for the defense literally pop-eyed.

The Annenberg case involves 19 individuals and corporations, seven indictments involving the laws against lotteries and a perjury charge. Batteries of accountants both for the government and the defense are at work on the records of two score Annenberg companies, impounded and guarded 24 hours a day.

In less than three months the defense filed 97 different motions, briefs and legal memoranda.

United States Attorney William J. Campbell at Chicago and his assistants have filed answer to this mass of legal documents written by defense counsel in the income tax cases, as well as in the lottery indictments against Annenberg. Outnumbered by defense lawyers, the government, with its limited staff, has never once demanded time out for breathing or to catch up with the pitching, although the defense has put everything into their legal delivery that could be doped out.

In addition to answering the defense tit for tat in its pleas and motions, the government has filed various motions and memoranda of its own in this legal battle of the century. Hundreds of thousands of words already have been incorporated in the record to date. Neither the defense nor the government is leaving any game turned in preparing the case.

Prosecutor Campbell has said he and his aides are ready. And the "boys in the back rooms" have started making bets on the outcome. (Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

• TALBOT MUNDY—WNU SERVICE

THE STORY THUS FAR

Captain Carl Norwood has been sent from his native England to the Kadur River district in India, along with his indispensable manservant, Moses O'Leary, soldier of fortune. Norwood's job is to survey the district to determine whether a valuable secret diamond mine belongs to the temple priests or to the ruler, the Maharajah of Kadur. Norwood calls on the British Residency to pay his initial respects. On his way he catches a glimpse of two women in a palace carriage, one of whom is young and beautiful. The other woman he knows to be the Maharane, of Kadur. O'Leary later tells him that the young woman is an American girl named Lynn Harding, who with her aunt, Mrs. Deborah Harding, is a guest at the palace. On a sightseeing tour Mrs. Harding sprains an ankle, and sends to the palace for aid. Prince Rundhia, handsome, spoiled nephew of the rulers, comes to her rescue, and takes her back to the palace where he meets Lynn.

CHAPTER III—Continued

"We love you and we will all do our best to make you happy," said the Maharane. "But the astrologer says this is a time of great crisis for us. I believe you are a sending, as we call it. There are many sendings just now, and they are badly mixed. They are contradictory and in opposition to one another. His Highness my husband is so anxious to make a good impression on Captain Norwood. It is so important. Will you help us to make a good impression on him?"

"But I might do the wrong thing! I might say the wrong word. I might commit some indiscretion. Am I in on an intrigue?" asked Lynn.

"Yes, dear, a very serious intrigue."

"Oh, what fun! Is it dangerous?"

"The astrologer says that it might become dangerous."

"Maharane dear, this sounds wonderful! Is it a real dark oriental intrigue?"

The Maharane laughed amiably, after a second's hesitation and with noticeable effort:

"Yes, dear, it is certainly dark. It is secret, and it has to do with a diamond mine, but I hope you won't mention that to anyone."

"I'm glad you warned me. Of course, I won't mention it."

CHAPTER IV

Captain Carl Norwood's tent faced the Kadur River. About a mile away, it resembled a moonlit irregular ribbon of silver streaming from the enormous temple; and the temple was a citadel of mystery that loomed against Indian night. There was a stillness that seemed like the womb of music, into which the clatter and voices from the camp kitchen fell naturally and the hoofbeats of a cantering horse thudded on dusty earth like calculated drumbeats.

A shadow that was a horse was reined in with unnecessary vigor. A palace messenger dismounted. Norwood's servant, careful for his master's dignity, accepted a silver tube with the air of conferring a favor.

Norwood opened the tube, after he had made sure that the servant had withdrawn to a sufficient distance. Then he went to the table and wrote, inserted his own letter into the tube and returned it to the messenger, who cantered away.

"Tell Moses I want him."

Moses O'Leary came and stood in the door of the tent.

"I've been invited to the palace for supper."

"I haven't had time yet, sir, to find out much about what's doing at the palace."

"Has anyone from the palace been enquiring about me?"

"Yes, sir. Prince Rundhia's servant came asking if you'd need to borrow a horse. He knew you didn't, because we were standing right under our horses' noses when he asked the question. Besides, I weren't the right person to ask. But he slipped me a box of the Prince's cigars and asked a lot about you."

"What did you tell him?"

"Me? I told him you're the mildest man on earth, and how nothing interests you so much as running surveys."

"What did you find out?"

"Same as I told you—not much. He had his orders, and he hadn't had time to forget 'em, and he's scared of the Prince. I got a line on the Prince all right. His brains are made of curry powder and red pepper. He's about as safe to tackle as a she-cobra that has just laid her eggs. He's what they call a steamer."

"What do you mean?"

"Nothing for nothing. Lavish—at cent per cent. He'd give you anybody's money, if he knew what he was getting for it."

"If I should hear of your taking his money, you'll find yourself in serious trouble."

"Me?"

"Yes. You."

"I'm incorruptible."

"What else did you find out?"

"Nothing, except what I've already told you. There's a Mrs. Harding and a Miss Harding at the guesthouse. Mrs. Harding has a hurt foot and has been attended by Prince Rundhia's doctor. Miss Harding has already met Rundhia, and they've talked."

"What about the doctor?"

"He's no good."

"No good in what way?"

"No self-respect. Scared. He lets the Prince brow-beat him—takes a tongue lashing without answering back—lets himself be treated like a dog—no dignity except when the Prince isn't looking."

"Nothing new about Noor Mahlam?"

"No. I reckon they'll call him off. He was just a try-out, that's all he was—sort of skirrmisher to feel out the lay of the land."

"Find out all you can about Prince Rundhia."

"That ought to be easy. I'll go to the bazaar tonight."

Nothing was ever quite like it in Kadur's history. Plumbing, electric light, modern furniture, and even the will to do it can't make an Indian palace, dusty with tradition, lend itself to what the Maharane kept insisting was a picnic. She wanted to be so modern and unconventional that even Rundhia would approve. Sullenly defied by the outraged head-steward, whose turban almost rose from his hair with horror, she dismissed him and took charge.

The eventual compromise was something between a bean-feast and a banquet, in the glass-roofed patio, amid a forest of potted palms and canaries in silver cages. There were Chinese lanterns and an utter drunkenness of flowers. The long table was loaded with silver and gold.

Norwood found himself between the Maharane and Auntie.

But there were paper napkins (those were Lynn's suggestion).

The Maharane summoned the Keeper of the Jewels, selected a cluster of the most famous diamonds from the Kadur collection, and pinned it artfully on Lynn's black silk. Lynn looked stunning in embroidered black silk. It showed off her eyes and her golden hair. Excitement made her parted lips so kissable that the Maharane had qualms of conscience.

"Darling, my nephew Rundhia is a bad boy! Be careful!"

Lynn laughed. The prospect of annoying Auntie was delicious. Auntie would be scandalized by high jinks in a palace. Auntie was one of those people who think that palace life should be like one endless coronation ceremony in Westminster Abbey. She could count on Auntie to keep Rundhia within bounds.

The first arrival was Rundhia, in dinner jacket and turban of cloth of silver, critical of the cocktails; he introduced ingredients learned in Europe. He watched Lynn. He made apparently random remarks to discover her system, in case she had one.

"Miss Harding, you look innocent, gay and very beautiful. But I mistrust you. Your emotions seem to me to be too honest. You will go home and laugh at us all."

"Going home soon," Lynn answered. "Auntie didn't laugh when she said that. She meant it."

"Is that what amuses you?"

"No. I'd rather stay here. Love it."

"I wonder what you mean by love it. Do you love us?"

"I love the Maharane. And I love these pussy-footed eastern nights. I'm wild about it all. I can't bear the thought of going home yet."

Rundhia smiled.

The sheep-faced Maharajah entered, toadied by attendants, who arranged the cushion for him in a chromium-plated armchair at the end of the long room. Too polite to speak any other language than English in Lynn's presence, he frowned sullenly at Rundhia and refused a cocktail:

"Your Bengali didn't bring my tonic."

"Sorry," said Rundhia. "He was attending to Mrs. Harding. He hasn't forgotten it."

Then came Norwood. Hot night though it was, he was in full mess uniform, not whites. Shorter than Rundhia; but five feet eleven inches is, after all, plenty, if it's built right and properly carried. Rundhia's six feet one, and almost perfect features, somehow weren't so noticeable after Norwood came into the room. Norwood had red hair and one of those bits of moustaches that draw attention to the line of his lips. His red shell jacket gloved a vigorous torso. There was nothing meek about him; nothing arrogant. He was a British gentleman in uniform, as unselfconscious as a visitor at the zoo.

He recognized Lynn instantly. His expression changed to let her know he recognized her. But he was imperturbable. Nothing surprised him. The palace chamberlain presented him to the Maharajah and the Maharane. He was gracious to them. The Maharane introduced him to Lynn. He studied her. He smiled. He said:

"How do you do. We have met, I believe. I am very curious. Don't tell me. It might spoil the fun of finding out. Am I to sit next to you at dinner? I was always lucky."

Then he walked up and shook hands with Rundhia: "Pleased."

"Yes. Nice to meet you."

It suggested the well-oiled motion of machine-guns getting ready. They were enemies, at sight, as charmed to meet each other as match and powder barrel. Lynn knew it instantly.

Then Auntie arrived. After that, there was nothing to do but to listen to Auntie's distant condensations. She was wonderful. Even Rundhia admired her spunk. Dressed in a formal evening gown on purpose to make Lynn feel ashamed of herself, taped and strapped by the doctor until she could hardly move, in torture from the twisted ankle, she proposed to dominate that company. She did, until Norwood subdued her. She wasn't used to being snubbed by mere captains.

"What do Engineer officers do?" she demanded.

"Nothing," he said, "except answer questions. Why? I might lend you a man who can do things."

The Maharajah was interrupted by the arrival of the Bengali doctor, followed by a servant with a big blue goblet on a tray. The Maharajah swallowed the contents of the goblet in one long draught and Norwood noticed that he became immediately more at ease. But Norwood was also watching Rundhia, who left off dancing with Lynn and accompanied the Bengali to the door, talking to him low-voiced.

Norwood promptly commandeered Lynn.

"If I were you," he said, "I'd stick to champagne. The cocktails taste phoney."

Lynn wasn't sure she liked him. On the other hand, she wasn't sure she didn't.

"Why were you rude to Auntie?"

"She was rude to me," he answered.

"She had an accident today. so she isn't herself."

"Who is? You, for instance? Princess? Cinderella on her night out? Or rebel? You know what happens to rebels, don't you, unless their friends are reliable?"

A great gong boomed. It was as ancient as the palace. It was the bronze voice of memory.

"Picnic!" exclaimed the Maharane. "No formality. Lynn, dear, lead the way. We will all follow."

So the Maharajah came last, to the servants' horror, and it was Lynn who contrived the seating. Norwood's luck suffered a flat tire. He found himself between the Maharane and Auntie. Rundhia and Lynn sat opposite: the Maharajah at one end of the table, the Maharane at the other.

The Maharajah only pretended to eat. In theory, he had abandoned caste restrictions, but in practice, he lacked the Maharane's courage. He wilted under Auntie Harding's barrage of remarks. Her vigor depressed him. Auntie had no patience with weaklings:

"You're a hypochondriac," she told him.

The Maharajah sighed. "I am a victim of public duty. Affairs of state impose a sedentary life that has ruined my health. But I have found that Rundhia's physician understands my ailment."

The physician reappeared in the doorway, nervous, self-assertive. He came behind Auntie's chair and whispered to her. Norwood couldn't hear what he said, but he saw him lay two pellets on a plate at Auntie's right hand.

"Drugs! No thank you!"

"What are they?" asked the Maharajah.

"Exactly the same that your Highness has been taking for your nerves," said the physician.

"I have iron nerves," said Auntie.

The physician smiled. He separated the two pellets with a fork and held the plate toward the Maharajah.

"Set her the example," he suggested.

"My monotonous life consists of nothing else than setting good examples," said the Maharajah. "If it won't hurt me, it won't hurt you." He reached for a pellet.

Norwood noticed that the doctor moved the plate so that the Maharajah's fingers closed on the one that had been nearer Auntie. If it was a trick it was smooth. Rundhia was paying rather witty attention to Lynn; he was making her laugh.

"As a compliment, but against my better judgment," said Auntie. She swallowed the other pellet.

"Thank you," said the Bengali.

"Thank you, madam. That relieves my anxiety. You should not be here. You should be in bed. There is no knowing what people's nerves may do to them when they have suffered a bodily shock such as you received this afternoon."

He bowed himself out.

Auntie used her napkin suddenly. Norwood watched her. He was just in time to prevent her falling from the chair. Everyone, including the Maharajah, jumped up. Lynn ran to her. The servants formed a scurrying around Lynn and Auntie. The Maharajah scolded the Maharane sotto voce.

Rundhia sent a servant running for the doctor. The other servants picked up Auntie and carried her into the next room, where she groaned on a couch and nearly fainted from humiliation. Rundhia met the doctor at the door. Norwood, watching them, pretended not to, wasn't certain whether they spoke. The doctor nodded, put on his most judicial professional air, felt Auntie's pulse and shrugged his shoulders.

"She has a temperature. It is impossible to say, but I think she is only suffering from nervous exhaustion and perhaps, too, from mental disturbance." He turned again to the Maharane: "I advise that Miss Lynn Harding should be moved into the palace, so that Mrs. Harding may be quiet."

Old Experiment Measures Weight of Earth

The measuring of the mass or weight of the earth is a familiar astronomical problem. Other bodies are weighed by measuring the attraction of the earth upon them; the same end is accomplished in the case of the earth, by comparing the attraction which this globe exerts upon some body on its surface with the attraction exerted upon the same body by a known mass at a known distance.

There have been several methods tried to accomplish this, the simplest of which is that of observing the deviation from the vertical of a plumb-line near an isolated mountain. The volume of the mountain must first be found, of course, by accurate survey, and its density calculated from the geological structure and density of its component rocks. But this plan, though simple, is not nearly as accurate in result as that of computation by means of the torsion balance. This method is known to astronomers as the "Cavendish experiment," from the scientist who first applied it in 1799.

Cavendish's method consists of measuring very accurately the attraction exerted by two large spheres of metal, on two much smaller metal balls. Two globes of lead are attached to the extremities of a large horizontal bar, movable, horizontally, upon a center. Above this center a light horizontal rod, having on its ends two very small balls of lead, is supported by a fine wire. When the rod bearing the small balls is in equilibrium, the ball having the globes of lead is moved until these globes are brought nearly in contact with the small balls. The force of their attraction then tends to draw the small rod from its position of equilibrium, and the amount of torsion thus produced is measured carefully.

This experiment is repeated several times, and the average of its results taken, so as to be as nearly accurate as possible. It is plain that the attraction of the large globes on the small ball is to the attraction of the earth upon the small balls—i. e., their weight—as the mass of the large balls is to the mass of the earth.

The result of these experiments has given the weight of the earth approximately as 6,000,000,000,000,000,000 tons.

GETHSEMANE: TRIUMPH THROUGH SURRENDER

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 26:36-46.
GOLDEN TEXT—Not as I will, but as thou wilt.—Matthew 26:39.

Surrender brings victory.

The world would say that our statement is not true; surrender is the mark of defeat. It is the final chapter in a story of struggle against impossible circumstances, against a stronger power, and finally of giving up to accept the bitter sorrow of subjection and sometimes destruction. But again we say, the way of strength is through surrender, for we speak of the spiritual realm and of our relationship to God. Here there is no victory until there is surrender. In fact, the measure of victory is the degree of surrender. Full submission to Christ means complete triumph for the Christian. The Lord Jesus does not ask His disciples to walk a way which He has not trod Himself. He went the way of full surrender to the will of God in the garden of Gethsemane. We observe five things about this way of "triumph through surrender." It was

I. A Way of Sorrow (vv. 37, 38).

He was exceedingly sorrowful unto death. It was not an easy thing that the Saviour did as He fulfilled the will of God the Father in the garden. We know that no man ever sorrowed as He did on that day, for only He bore the sins of the world. There is, however, a lesson here for us who are His disciples. If this is the road the Master trod, should not His servants tread it still? The way of victory for us is through surrender.

II. A Way of Self-Denial (vv. 39, 42, 44).

Self-denial does not consist in depriving one's self of some little cherished luxury. It means the denial of self, namely, that self-will is put aside and God's will is supreme.

It was no "easy thing for Jesus to carry out the Father's will and to go to the cross. He was submissive to that will; yet in this hour of anguish in the garden, when the unspeakable horror of what lay ahead almost overwhelmed His soul, it means much to say, 'Not as I will but as thou wilt' (Dr. B. L. Olmstead). It may be a hard thing to do, but by His grace we too may say, 'Thy will be done.'

III. A Way of Loneliness (vv. 36, 37, 40, 41, 43).

There were three disciples with Him as He entered the garden, and their very presence reminds us how very much alone Jesus actually was. There were twelve with Him in the upper room, but one went out into the darkness to betray Him. Eleven came with Him to the gate of the garden, but only three came into the garden with Him. Even they could not go all the way with Him. He prayed and agonized alone, and the three who were near at hand failed Him and slept through the dark hour when He most needed their fellowship in sympathy and prayer.

Alone? If the Master had to walk the way of surrender alone, let no Christian expect that it will be otherwise for him. Let us thank God for every blessing of true fellowship, but let us not be surprised if we are often called to walk alone—with God.

IV. A Way of Betrayal (vv. 45, 46).

"He is at hand who doth betray me" "into the hands of sinners." One feels that the cup of the Master is already overfull without adding betrayal by one of His own, but there it is, a dark and tragic reality. Note with what peace and assurance Jesus goes to meet it. The victory has already been won in prayer, in communion with the Father, and in submission to His will.

No one of us will ever know such a betrayal as that of our Lord, but we do face similar crises as we go on in a life of devotion to God's will. We do well to remember the experience of Christ that we be not overwhelmed by the treachery of men and that we prepare ourselves to meet it with the power and grace of our God.

V. A Way of Divine Fellowship and Blessing (vv. 39, 42).

The way of surrender is a glorious and delightful way to go. But, some one may ask, have we not been talking of sorrow, self-denial, loneliness and betrayal? Yes, but even these things may become the means of blessing if God is in them.

Though no man stood by our Lord in His experience in Gethsemane, the Father was there. Jesus trusted with Him, prayed to Him, talked with Him, yielded fully to His will, and the result was peace and blessing. We read in Luke 22:43 that an angel also came and strengthened Him.

were introduced before the Commission by delegations from the various communities. It appears that all of the communities affected, except Orland, desire the bettered service, which will only be furnished by the company at new rates, and, therefore, consent to and approve the entire project, including the revision of rates which would be effectuated by the tariffs attached to the petition.

A citizens' committee of the Village of Orland originally filed objections to this proceeding, but at the hearing of December 8, 1939, appearance was made on behalf of these citizens and the objections were withdrawn by the same group which had originally filed them.

Under all these circumstances, it seems to the Commission that the desires of the subscribers to these exchanges can best be served by granting the petition in this cause.

The Commission, having considered the application and the evidence presented in support thereof, and being fully advised in the premises, is of the opinion and finds:

(1) That the Illinois Bell Telephone Company is a corporation engaged in the rendering (of telephone service to the public within the State of Illinois and is a public utility as defined in Section 10 of "An Act concerning public utilities" approved June 29, 1921, in effect July 1, 1921 and as such is subject to the jurisdiction of this Commission;

(2) That the present rates in force in the Mokena, New Lenox, Orland, Palos Park and Tinley Park exchanges of petitioner do not pay the operating costs incident to the operation of those exchanges;

(3) That the rates shown in exhibit "A" to the petition herein will not produce more than a fair and reasonable return on the property devoted to public use by the petitioner in rendering telephone service in its Mokena, New Lenox, Orland, Palos Park and Tinley Park exchanges;

(4) That petitioner will not be advised long enough in advance of the cut-over from magneto to common battery service in each of said exchanges of the actual rates of such cut-over to enable it to file such proposed rates on 30 days notice.

(5) That the petitioner should be authorized to file the rates set forth in Exhibit "A" attached to the petition herein on less than 30 days notice, to be effective coincident with the cut-over from magneto to common battery service in the exchanges covered by the tariffs attached to the petition.

(6) That notices already published of these proposed changes are sufficient and no further notices of the filing of said schedules should be required.

It is therefore ordered by the Illinois Commerce Commission as follows:

(1) That the petitioner, Illinois Bell Telephone Company, be, and it is hereby authorized to file on less than 30 days notice the schedules of rates for its Mokena, New Lenox, Orland, Palos Park and Tinley Park exchanges set forth in exhibit "A" attached to the petition filed herein, which said schedules shall be effective coincident with the cut over from magneto to common battery service rendered to its subscribers in said exchanges.

(2) That no further notice be required from petitioner with relation to the filing of such rates.

Princess Frock Is Simple, Charming

CHARMING and changeable are the words for this very simple princess frock (1898-B). Charming, because it is so slim-waisted and flare-skirted, with wide shoulders gathered at the top. Changeable, because you can make the neckline two ways—either with the round tailored collar, or with the collarless square neckline. As a matter of fact, if you once get it on, and see what nice things it does to your figure, you'll want it both ways, and make it up time and again, in street materials as well as in day-time cottons. It's a very adaptable style, too, becoming to misses' and women's sizes alike.

For home wear, choose crisp cottons like gingham, percale or calico. For street or office wear, faille, flat crepe or gay silk print will be pretty, with collar and cuffs of pique, linen or sharkskin. Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1898-B is designed for sizes 14, 16, 18, 20; 40 and 42. Corresponding bust measurements 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42. Romance in Hardware

By ALICE DUANE
(McClure Syndicate—WNU Service.)

WHEN Peggy Prince was 15 she began selling kitchen utensils at Warner and Prince's after supper on Saturday nights. Peggy's father was half owner of the store, which did more business than any three other hardware stores in the county put together. Peggy had asked to work there to start with for the sake of earning a little extra spending money. At the time Harold Warner, just through high school, had just joined his father in the business.

Peggy had not tried to hide her admiration for the tall, fine-looking son of her father's partner. One evening after closing hours Mr. Prince had suggested driving Mr. Warner home in his car, and Harold had taken the hint and had asked permission to drive Peggy home in his father's car. So the custom had begun—for four years now Harold had driven Peggy home—and, incidentally, Peggy and Harold had become engaged.

Now Peggy was 20 and Harold was 23 and they were driving home after a Saturday evening that had been especially prosperous to the business which they would some day inherit.

"Of course, you like hardware," Peggy taunted Harold. "It's your whole life—hardware."

"I don't see why you jump at conclusions," said Harold. Then, after a pause, "As a matter of fact, I loath it—I loath hardware."

"You'd say anything to avoid an argument," said Peggy. "You haven't any idea of the way I feel about it. Sometimes I could just cut loose and run away. Lead my own life—instead of the life that has been cut out for me—"

Peggy paused and looked at Harold, but Harold, to her surprise, had not turned to look at her.

"I'd like to cut loose myself," he said at length. "I don't particularly hanker to lead a life that has been cut out for me either."

Peggy took a long breath, stretched out her arms, and then felt at a loss to know precisely what to say. "There are ever so many things I might do," she said. "I'd go somewhere where I'd have an opportunity. I'd want to be free; really to live, to think. Have you any brilliant idea for your own future—if you gave up hardware?"

"I have," said Harold simply.

"Well, if that's the way you feel, we might as well call our engagement off."

Peggy was decidedly annoyed, and this moment of her release from Harold didn't give her the sense of profound relief that she had anticipated.

"It's O. K. with me," said Harold, "if that's the way you feel about it."

And so within a few days Peggy and Harold told their fathers of their broken engagement, and started forth to seek their fortunes apart from hardware.

Three months later Mr. Prince appeared at the usual time on Saturday night and with him came Peggy, looking a little thinner—a little less buoyant than usual. Mr. Warner, who was measuring chicken wire at the time, looked up in surprise.

"Peggy's back for good," said Mr. Prince, gleefully. "Says she'll come back to sell kitchen things Saturdays, the same as usual, if we want her."

As soon as Mr. Warner was at liberty he went to Peggy and, laying a rough hand gently on her shoulder, said: "I'm glad you're back, my girl—only perhaps you'd rather leave early. Harold's coming back on the eight-thirty from the East. He's coming right here to the store. He didn't make out quite so well as he expected. Went up thinking he could beat those wolves of Wall street at their own game. Funny you two never ran into each other—just by chance."

"New York's too big for that," said Peggy demurely. "Besides, Wall street is miles from Fifty-eighth street."

Mr. Warner was laughing to himself. "So you'll stay and meet him here?" he asked. "Well, maybe you can get together again—you two. Though I hope you won't do it just to please your father and me."

Harold had come in the store by the back way, had hung up his hat on the accustomed peg before anyone knew he had entered the store.

"Need a hand to help with the chicken wire?" he called out to Mr. Prince, by way of attracting attention to his presence.

Mr. Prince turned red, rubbed his eyes, shook hands and stammered his welcome, with something like tears in his beaming eyes. Then he thought of Peggy, looked about the store to see whether she had seen Harold, and felt much embarrassed. Peggy stepped lightly to his side.

"Harold's back," said her father in a whisper. "Maybe you'd better go home."

"Hello, Harold," Peggy said, lightly. Their eyes met and they seemed to exchange an understanding message. "No, I didn't tell them," she said aloud. "I lost my nerve, after all. I thought maybe father'd notice that my trunk tag said Mrs. Harold Warner, but he didn't. We'll tell your father and mine together after we close store." And Peggy went off gleefully to a customer who wanted to buy a new saucepan.

ON ST. PATRICK'S DAY IN THE MORNIN'
(See Recipes Below)

Some Ideas for a Party

Shur-re an' in the mer'y month o' Mar-eh, it's St. Patrick's day we're thinkin' of when we pass along these ideas for a party.

Parties seem to move along more smoothly after a bit of fun—and fun it is to find an Irish Paddy's Pig at your place at the table! Small Irish potatoes, scrubbed until they shine, make the fat bodies of the pigs. For the head, fasten a large round gum drop to one end of each potato, with a toothpick. Make the snout from a small gum drop pinched to the proper shape, and fasten it to the head with a toothpick. Insert whole cloves for "facial features." Cut ears and a curly tail from jelly strings and fasten these in position with toothpicks too. Small gum drops, fastened to the body with toothpicks, make the legs.

Nut cups which look like Paddy's clay pipe, can be made from marshmallows, green cellophane soda straws, and a bit of green ribbon. With a pair of sharp-pointed scissors, hollow out the center of the marshmallow slightly, to form the bowl of the pipe. Tie a green ribbon (with a jaunty bow) around the pipe bowl, and insert a cellophane soda sipper low in one side, for the stem.

These two party menus are planned for St. Patrick's day. You'll find other suggestions for parties of every kind, in my cook book, "Easy Entertaining."

Menu I
Chicken Salad in Lettuce Cups
Hot Cloverleaf Rolls Potato Chips
St. Patrick's Lime Pie
Beverage

Menu II
Shamrock Salad
St. Pat's Hats Small Sweet Pickles
Angel Food Snowballs
Beverage

Green and White Mints Salted Nuts
Refrigerator Cloverleaf Rolls.
(Makes 3 dozen)

2 cups water (boiling)
¼ cup and 1 teaspoon sugar
1 tablespoon salt
6 tablespoons shortening (part butter for flavor)

2 cakes yeast
¼ cup water (lukewarm)
2 eggs (beaten)
8 cups flour

Mix together the boiling water, ¼ cup sugar, the salt, and shortening. Cool slightly. Dissolve yeast and 1 teaspoon sugar in the lukewarm water, and add to the first mixture. Add eggs and half of the flour. Beat well. Add remaining flour and mix thoroughly.

Place dough in greased bowl, grease the top lightly and cover the bowl. Store in refrigerator. Before using, let the dough stand at room temperature to warm up, before shaping the rolls. To shape cloverleaf rolls, brush very small balls of the dough with melted butter and place three balls in each section of a greased muffin pan. Let rise until light and bake in a moderately hot oven (400 degrees) for about 20 minutes.

Cooked Mayonnaise Dressing.
2 tablespoons vinegar
2 eggs (beaten)
1 cup salad oil
¼ teaspoon dry mustard
¼ teaspoon paprika
½ teaspoon salt

Add vinegar gradually to the beaten eggs, and continue beating until blended. Cook in a double boiler, stirring constantly until the mixture thickens. Remove from flame and cool. Then slowly add the oil, beating constantly. Combine seasonings and fold into the dressing.

Fruit Salad Dressing.
While making your favorite boiled salad dressing recipe you'll undoubtedly want to reserve half of the dressing "as is" for use on vegetable salads. However, to the remaining half—which should be hot—

Are "left-overs" a problem in your household? They needn't be! There are clever, unusual ways of using them. Next week Eleanor Howe will give you some of her own favorite recipes and suggestions for using odds and ends of vegetables and meats, and even a hint or two for using stale cake and pie.

add a few quartered marshmallows and fold until melted. This dressing will be sweeter and fluffier than the original and is perfectly delightful to keep on hand for fruit salads of all kinds.

Angel Food Snowballs.

(Makes 16)
½ cup milk
2 tablespoons butter
1 cup sugar
1 cup flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
4 egg whites
½ teaspoon cream of tartar
1 teaspoon vanilla

Heat milk and butter to scalding point. Add sugar and dissolve. Sift flour, baking powder and salt, and combine with the milk and sugar mixture. Beat well. Beat egg whites until frothy, add cream of tartar, and beat until the egg whites stand up in points. Fold into the batter and add vanilla. Pour into greased muffin pans and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees) for about 20 minutes.

St. Patrick's Lime Pie.
(Serves 6)
4 eggs (separated)
¾ cup sugar
1 tablespoon flour
¼ cup lime juice
Pastry cut in shamrock shapes and baked

Rind of one lime (grated)
Green vegetable coloring
½ teaspoon salt
1 baked pie shell

Beat the egg yolks until thick and light-colored. Mix ½ cup of the sugar and the flour, add lime juice and grated rind, and combine with the egg yolks. Cook until thick, over very low heat, stirring constantly. Cool. Add just enough green coloring to tint the filling slightly. Add salt to egg whites and beat until stiff; gradually add the remaining ¼ cup of sugar, and beat until very stiff. Fold into the yolk mixture and pour into baked pie shell. Place pastry shamrocks on top. Bake in a moderately hot oven (415 degrees) for 5 to 7 minutes, or until the filling is set. Cool.

St. Pat's 'Hats.'
Using a large round slice of bread (buttered) for a brim, build up a hat crown with a layer each of tunafish salad and sliced tomato, placed between 3 smaller bread circles. Stick a toothpick down through center. Spread entire sandwich with green-tinted cream cheese. Add green pepper hat band. Chill. Serve on shredded lettuce.

A NAME FOR THE MOTHER-IN-LAW

"Did you see," asked Senator Dumm, "where a group of women recently voted for a change in the term 'mother-in-law'?"

"I did," replied Representative Dummer. "They voted to change it to kin-mother, the big sillies."

"The foolish season is here ahead of time," said the senator, "and winter must be nearly over. There are many names I could call the old girl, but kin-mother is not among 'em."

"What was the big idea, anyhow?" asked Dummer. "Were the mothers-in-law complaining?"

"Mothers-in-law are always complaining," snapped the senator. "Do you see this bruise over my eye?"

"I do," said Dummer. "How come?"

"From walking up to my wife's old lady and saying, 'Hello, kin-mother'; that's how I got it. She thought I said something else, and when I tried to explain she said mother-in-law was good enough for her, and it would have to be good enough for me."

"I noticed that there were many other names suggested before the final vote," said Dummer.

"One of 'em was 'Blitzkrieg Mother,'" laughed the senator. "I rather liked that one. It will linger in my memory long after I have forgotten all about 'kin-mother.' But do you know what I think is called for now?"

"No."

"A new name for mothers-in-law to call their sons-in-law and daughters-in-law."

"Haven't our mothers-in-law enough names for them already?" asked Dummer.

"I mean something printable; something that can be used in polite society," argued the senator.

"How about asking her to call you a kin-son?" asked Dummer.

"She would retaliate by calling me a kin-bum and say she misunderstood me," barked Senator Dumm.

"Couldn't she just call you a kin-guy or a kin-sap?" asked Dummer.

"She might be glad to," said the senator.

"Will anything come of the whole business?" asked Dummer.

"Nothing whatever," declared Senator Dumm. "A man never refers to his mother-in-law as his mother-in-law, anyhow. He either calls her 'that woman,' 'old iron-sides,' 'the crackdown' or 'the family static.'"

"Do you know what I call mine?" asked Dummer.

"What?"

"The Roman Galley," declared Dummer.

"Why?" asked the senator, a bit puzzled.

"Because she is always putting in her oar," concluded Representative Dummer, dodging a chair.

Zealous Photographer Was Looking Ahead

Photographs had been taken at the wedding, and the happy pair were assured that proofs would be sent to them so that the best might be chosen for delivery.

Some days passed, and the looked-for envelope arrived.

All agog, the young couple opened the envelope. But instead of pictures of the bridal group they were confronted with studies of a two-months-old baby.

The bride nearly collapsed. So did the bridegroom—when, on looking at the back of one of the proofs, he read: "Please state clearly when ordering which size you want, and how many."

THE TRUTH SIMPLY TOLD

Today's popularity of Doan's Pills, after many years of world-wide use, surely must be accepted as evidence of satisfactory use. And favorable public opinion supports that of the able physicians who test the value of Doan's under exacting laboratory conditions.

If more people were aware of how the kidneys must constantly remove waste that cannot stay in the blood without injury to health, there would be better understanding of why the whole body suffers when kidneys lag, and diuretic medication would be more often employed.

Burning, scanty or too frequent urination sometimes warn of disturbed kidney function. You may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel weak, nervous, all played out.

Use Doan's Pills. It is better to rely on a medicine that has won world-wide acclaim than on something less favorably known. Ask your neighbor!
